Military prepares in El Salvador to recapture city

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A government battalion was reported moving into positions on the slopes of Cimarron Hill on Wednesday, preparing for a counterattack to retake the guerrilla-held city of Berin atop the hill.

Civilians at the Cuscatlan bridge, 7 miles west of Berin, said they saw six air force helicopters fly over the bridge and land on the slopes of the hill. They said an air force attack plane bombed suspected guerrilla positions north of Berin.

Berlin, a town of 30,000 in Usulután province and a farming center overlooking the Lempa River, is the biggest town taken by the leftist rebels of the Farabundo Martí National Liberation Front in their 38-month-old guerrilla war against the U.S.-supported government.

Its capture facilitated the rebels' campaign of economic sabotage in a stretch of rich cotton and coffee lands 25 miles long and about 10 miles wide from the Pacific coast nearly to the Pan-American Highway.

The town was defended by less than 100 troops, police and militiamen, and rebel snipers apparently had no difficulty turning back two small convoys of reinforcements sent to aid them. After about 50 guerrillas overwhelmed the defenders Monday night, the government moved about 1,500 troops into the area from the north.

Civilians in Mercedes Umana, about 6 miles north of Berlin, reported helicopters flying over late Tuesday, possibly bringing in more troops or supplies.

Although the rebel commander in Berlin indicated that the guerrillas might not try to hold it, the capture of the city demonstrated their increasing ability to operate on more than one front.

Some foreign military experts in El Salvador said the fall of Berlin demonstrated that the government could lose the war unless its military changed their tactics.

Provo's population growth has outrun its growth in revenues and developed resources.

Provo Mayor James E. Ferguson presented the city council, citizens and city employees with his first "state of the city" address Tuesday night. Ferguson spoke about successes and failures experienced by Provo's one-year-old council/mayor form of government.

"Provo has been growing at a tremendous rate, while our ability to provide services to our citizens has been hampered with a considerably proportionately lower growth in revenue," Ferguson said. "Water lines, sewer lines, power lines, roads, etc., are now at the end of their effective life and are in need of replacement or improvement."

Ferguson said one of the major issues he has been concerned with has been Provo's lack of a diversified, strong economic development program.

Industry sought

A full-time economic development coordinator was hired to work on aggressively seeking industry to relocate in Provo. Ferguson reported that a prospect list of potential industries is growing. "We need companies will soon set up business in Provo: Li-quad Air and Mountain County Food.

Other projects in the works are the new Excelsior Hotel, which will bring 250 jobs to Provo; an auto mall, on which construction will begin this spring; and a downtown mall, which Ferguson said "isn't dead."

Problems concerning diminishing energy resources are keeping the city busy looking at all viable means of increasing efficiency of present facilities and at other generation sources, he noted.

Ferguson said less than 5 percent of city streets were overlaid last year and that "a serious point has been reached . . . street conditions and maintenance activities must be thoroughly evaluated in 1983."

The sanitation areas are reaching capacity.

Armed robberies significantly increased in the latter half of 1982. "Twenty-five armed robberies were reported in 1982 as opposed to eight for 1981," Ferguson said. "The Police Department's crime prevention officer is currently working on a major anti-arm robbery program that will focus first on grocery stores and later involve financial institutions."

Crimes decrease

Other serious crimes decreased, such as assaults, residential and business burglaries. Officers responded to 22,799 calls for services, representing an increase of 2.8 percent. Fifteen percent of the fire calls in Provo were determined to be arson or of suspicious origin.

Positive improvements in the city include renovating parks, adding public recreation programs and a community yule fair.

A pre-application for an airport improvement program grant has been submitted to the Federal Aviation Administration and Utah State Division of Aeronautics for $2.5 million to upgrade runways, taxiways and provide additional tie-down areas.

The mayor expressed concern over property tax revenues and sales tax collections, indicating they are 5 percent behind last year.

Despite all the work Provo council members, the mayor, employees and citizens may find ahead of them in 1983, Ferguson said he is positive about where the city is going. "I have a dream about what Provo will be some day," he said.

"A city that has a downtown reflecting its historical character and its progressive future. Neighborhoods that are beautiful, clean, and safe. Well-designed business parks. Resources that are planned and maintained to meet the needs of our children and our grandchildren."

Ferguson ended with a plea to everyone to cooperate in his dream, one that he thinks is obtainable.

Tavern owners push for changes

Uniform beverage law sought

WAYNE WATSON
Staff Writer

Owners of taverns in unincorporated areas of Utah County are seeking to revise an ordinance that allows alcoholic beverages to be sold in drinking establishments in Provo and men but not in rural areas.

But county officials are concerned at making the law uniform for all areas of Utah County would put too much work on the shoulders of the sheriff's office, said Jerry Wilson, Utah County Commissioner.

"Since it's legal to dance in an establishment where beer is sold in Provo and Orem, some business owners living in various rural areas of the county want to make it legal in their areas too," Wilson said.

"We're now in the process of conducting public hearings to weigh the community's interest," Wilson said. "If we allow beer to be sold in drinking establishments throughout the unincorporated areas of the county, and if it were to create additional problems for the county sheriff, it wouldn't be a good idea."

James M. Revel, owner of the Black Hawk Trading Post in Spring Lake, said he would rather see people dancing and having a good time in a dinner club than carrying on in the hills.

"I don't want to have a big bar, saloon or a dance hall. I just want to have a nice dinner club where customers can come and have an enjoyable time," he said.

Revel said he'd like to see the law standardized throughout the county.

"I'm tired of people regulating the moral character of human beings. It's either legal for the entire county or illegal for the entire county," he said.

The Utah County Sheriff's Office is concerned with the additional protection required during these dances in rural portions of the county, Utah County Sheriff Mack Holley said.

"We have plenty to do in the county with existing manpower without adding any other responsibilities," he said.

Revel and his lawyer, Bill Hansen, are preparing a report to present to the county commissioners in a public hearing Feb. 9 at 10 a.m. at the county building in Provo.

"We've found that similar establishments exist in Salt Lake County, and they haven't had any problem," Hansen said. "I hope the matter will be weighed fairly."

Bob Lamoreaux, a Spring Lake

lawyer, is preparing a list of objections to present at the same hearing.

"I can't see where police protection will be adequate in the rural areas to respond to any trouble which may arise because of the additional alcohol influence," he said.

"With the state Legislature now meeting with an attempt to get the drunk driver off the road," he said, "I can't see why we would want to get a person to a dance, sell him beer and get him all tanked up, let him dance all night, and then have him out on the road driving home."

Lamoreaux agrees that this is legal in Provo and Orem, but adds that "they have police and fire departments close by. We're dealing with an element of protection and the distance of this protection to the unincorporated areas of the county."

Snow, windstorms thrash helpless U.S.; 1 dead, many injured

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A half-dozen tornadoes howled across Florida on Wednesday, killing one person and blacking out thousands of homes, while a snowstorm billed as the worst of the winter in parts of the Midwest piled up more drifts in a three-day onslaught that has claimed 16 lives.

In Pennsylvania, where Punxsutawney's groundhog failed to see his shadow and thus forecast an early spring, winds gusted to 74 mph topped trees and flung over two tractor-trailers in Erie. The National Weather Service urged residents of the area to stay indoors.

Meanwhile, a new Pacific storm hit water-logged Southern California with moderate rain and gusty winds. Forecasters warned of rock and mudslides in coastal areas battered by devastating storms last week.

A line of heavy thunderstorms and tornadoes moved into northeastern Florida before dawn, overturning cars and house trailers, tearing off roofs and uprooting trees.

Eight people were injured when a twister slammed into an apartment complex in Orlando, where about 100 homes were reported damaged.

A 60-year-old man was killed in Hawthorne when his house collapsed during a tornado. In Dover, a tornado tore homes from their foundations, injuring two women, and a man was hospitalized in New Harmony for injuries suffered when a twister flipped over his trailer and left him pinned beneath a refrigerator.

But fatigue is a problem

Drug and alcohol abuse less frequent at Y

By DON PAVER
Staff Writer

Drugs, alcohol and promiscuity tend to be part of the culture at several major universities in the West. BYU may not be immune to these problems, but the number of reported cases is much lower, according to officials at the McDonald Health Center.

"Drug and alcohol abuse are problems that we do see, but we don't see nearly as many as other colleges," said Diane Shepherd, health educator at the center.

Dr. Clay C. Hofheins said the major health problem at BYU is the fatigue syndrome. Students with the syndrome tend to become overly tired because of the demands they put on themselves to do school work and to have fun while attending college.

"We have an interesting population here. At other universities, this syndrome is covered by the use of alcohol, drugs and caffeine drinks or drugs containing caffeine," Hofheins said.

Self-treatment is the mode used by students at other universities to handle the syndrome. "Here at this university, the use of alcohol, drugs and caffeine is not allowed or approved," the doctor said.

At the University of Arizona, the incidence of drug abuse is hard to isolate, according to Dr. Kenneth Marsh, head of the mental health section at that school's health center.

Marsh estimated 60 to 75 percent of the student body there use marijuana.

"People coming in for treatment have a primary problem of depression and may have a drug or alcohol-related problem," Marsh said about the students.

"We have a golden opportunity to educate on alcohol and drugs," Marsh said. "Ninety percent of our resources ought to be directed toward education rather than treatment," he added.

Gerald J. Fleishlich, University of Nebraska Health Center director, said many students there have a problem with drug and alcohol use, particularly alcohol.

The Lincoln Memorial Hospital is developing programs recognizing drug and alcohol problems at the University of Nebraska, Fleishlich said. The hospital is working in conjunction with the university to educate students regarding these abuses.

"We see a few students with alcohol problems, but it's so much a part of the student's culture," said Judy Greenberg, health educator at San Diego State University.

There are those who drink too much. Students need an incident or something with a strong impact on their lives before they come into the health center for treatment, Greenberg said.

"Drug and alcohol abuse are problems that we do see, but we don't see nearly as many as other colleges."
— Diane Shepherd

"Drugs, like alcohol, are an accepted part of our culture," she said, and students do not seek help for that problem from on-campus sources.

While promiscuity may not be so large a problem at BYU, it is still part of a growing headache at other universities.

"This is a young population that is sexually oriented," Greenberg said. "It is certainly a problem."

At the University of Nebraska, Nursing Services handle problem pregnancies, Fleishlich said.

"We do not do abortions here — we provide alternatives."

Over the years there have been a few reports of venereal disease at BYU, according to Hofheins. Those with the disease were going to Salt Lake City for treatment because Utah Valley did not have a VD center.

Several organizations opened centers over the years for venereal disease counseling and treatment. Even the health center opened one downtown. Hofheins said.

"There have been some problems," he said, concerning BYU students. "We found very few cases, but found there was promiscuity among a few students."

Hofheins concludes that before students come to BYU, they have made the decision not to participate in drugs, alcohol and promiscuous activities.

At BYU, problems with promiscuity are handled by LDS bishops. Shepherd said because of the moral implications, the punishment is severe when BYU students are involved in sexually inappropriate behavior.

Stanley Whitaker, University Standards chairman, the university has a working relationship with the ecclesiastical personnel associated with the university.

There are students at BYU who may think they have been dealt with unfairly regarding standards, but, Whitaker said, the students are treated with love and kindness in the spirit of the principles and practices of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

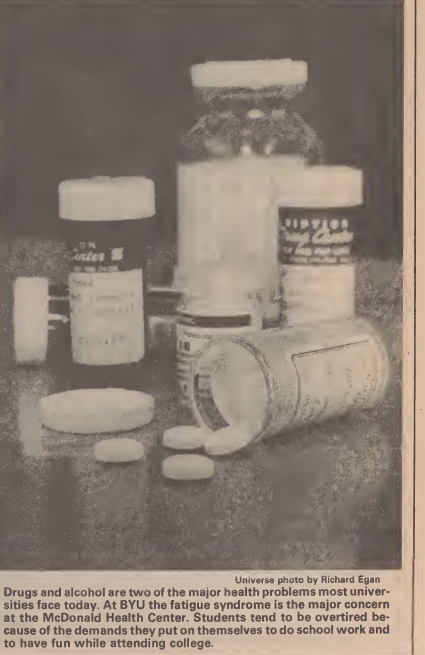

The confidentiality of information is stressed by University Standards, the McDonald Health Center and the Counseling Center.

Eugene T. Buckner, director of the Counseling Center, said the health and counseling centers are administered by the university and, according to law, as licensed professionals they are not subject to disclosing confidential or privileged information to the standards office.

"A violation of confidence is a violation of the law," Buckner said.

Students avoid the health center when they have a major health problem stemming from illegal or immoral activity because they fear they will be turned over to the University Standards Office, Shepherd said. The students tend to seek help in the community, she added.

This sentiment was echoed by Marsh at the University of Arizona. He said many students do not seek counseling through student health services. However, he said, they would go for counseling if they could be sure the information is to be kept confidential.

Drugs and alcohol are two of the major health problems most universities face today. At BYU the fatigue syndrome is the major concern at the McDonald Health Center. Students tend to be overtired because of the demands they put on themselves to do school work and to have fun while attending college.

Sniping witness may face hypnotism

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Police in Brigham City asked a witness Wednesday if she would consent to be hypnotized in an effort to get information on a sniping that seriously wounded a trucker.

And the Utah Highway Patrol said truck traffic at the state's ports of entry was normal to half of normal in the third day of a nationwide independent truckers' strike.

"We're at the same place we were yesterday. No suspects, no suspect vehicles," Lt. Charles Earl of the Brigham City police department said of the Monday shooting of tractor driver W. Adams Jr., Adams, 45, Riverside, Calif., was in serious but stable condition at the Brigham City Hospital on Wednesday, Earl said. He was shot in the left chest as he was in the back of his truck unloading some goods.

A woman who was driving by heard the shot, saw Adams slump over, drove around the block and stopped to ask him if he was all right, Earl said.

"We've asked her if she would submit to be hypnotized and see if she could come up with something else," he said. The witness still was deciding Wednesday whether to submit to the hypnosis.

Tax on six-packs will raise funds to prevent abuse

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A Senate committee Wednesday approved a proposed beer tax bill that would add about a nickel to the price of a six pack.

The proposed tax is one of two before the Legislature. A bill being considered by the House would put an additional 7.3-cents in taxes on each six-pack sold in the state.

The Senate Social Services Committee voted 3-0 to pass the nickel tax, sponsored by Sen. Fred Finlison, R-Salt Lake, which would raise $2.3 million for programs to prevent alcohol abuse.

Opponents of Finlison's bill say the tax unfairly singles out beer. Max K. Mangum, representing Adolph Coors Brewery, said beer accounts for only 54 percent of the alcohol consumed in Utah. He said the Legislature should also tax liquor and wine — which are sold by the state — to support the education programs.

He said the state earned $18 million in direct profits from liquor and wine sales last year.

"The state of Utah is responsible for the social costs that originate from their own monopoly," he said.

Police believe the shot came from a sniper who was a passenger in a car, he said.

Police in Murray also continued to investigate a Monday incident in which truck driver Ricky D. Colbert, 29, Bakersfield, Calif., was driving through the Salt Lake City suburb when his truck was hit by a .22 caliber bullet.

The bullet passed through the passenger side of the vehicle and lodged in the seat about two inches from Colbert's leg.

Utah Highway Patrol officials at the Wendover and St. George ports of entry reported normal truck traffic, while troopers in Brigham City and Echo Junction said it was down.

"Things have been completely normal here since the start as far as I can tell," said Tony Kerbovich, at the Wendover stop. "Things have gone beautifully — no problems. If anything, traffic has increased and is steady among all types of carriers."

"I can detect no great apprehension among drivers and they say the strike is no big-talk issue at the big Nevada truck stops," he said.

Drop deadline Tuesday, 7,000 cards expected

By WENDY BLASER
Staff Writer

The last day students may officially withdraw from first-block classes for non-academic reasons will be Tuesday.

Students dropping a class will be charged the $10 fee.

Those students who drop classes after Tuesday will receive a "W/E" on their transcript. A "W/E" denotes a withdrawal from class with a failing grade.

Approximately 7,000 additional drop cards are expected before Tuesday, said Robert Spencer, dean of admissions. A surge is expected, but the total drops should be no more than in past years, he said.

Because of faculty and student complaints, revisions in the add/drop policy were made for 1983 school year, Spencer said.

"The new policy is to be of service to students, and the graduated fees give them the incentive to drop," Spencer said.

"Approximately 90 percent of the students get to class in the first two days of classes, and they can find out if they want to drop any classes" before a fee is charged, he said.

In addition to a graduated fee schedule, the new policy eliminates the requirement that students get an instructor's signature to drop a class.

The fact that dropping classes is easier under the new program helps solve the problem of students not being able to get into high-demand classes, Spencer said.

Spencer said there have been more good than bad responses to the policy change. However, at least five complaints about the new policy were voiced in The Daily Universe through letters to the editor.

"Upon evaluating my work load, I determined that I didn't have time to take a one-credit class, and was forced to drop the class with a $9 fee, and it didn't seem fair," said Janna Brink, a sophomore from Tustin, Calif., majoring in Spanish.

Although some students have complained, the admissions office has also received many complaints on the program from faculty members, Spencer said.

The statistics on the new policy show a dramatic improvement in the add/drop program, he said.

Homebuilders hopeful, expect market upswing

The National Association of Homebuilders' annual convention optimistically focused on preparation for an upswing in the construction market, said Dr. Jay Newitt, assistant professor of industrial education.

Six BYU students and two faculty members attended the conference conducted in Houston, Texas, from Jan. 19 to Jan. 25. They chose to visit seminars from among the 100 offered, viewed the thousands of exhibits, and had interviews with the largest companies from across the nation about management positions, Newitt said.

The highlight, said Leon Rogers, assistant professor of industrial education, was the optimism of builders and buyers. "They are excited for the first time in three years. They want to broaden their skills; they want to expand."

Newitt said one emphasis was on increasing management skills and getting organized so that when the market turns, builders will be ready.

The convention spotlighted computers, Newitt said, because they are valuable instruments of management. "More and more computer programs are being developed for contractors."

Another emphasis was diversification — showing what kinds of projects builders can undertake until business picks up, said Darrell Bostwick, a graduate student from Provo.

Bostwick said there were workshops in cost control, energy developments and business techniques.

Provo attorneys accept suit

By MARK HALL
Staff Writer

Provo attorneys who made history in a summer 1982 malpractice suit, winning $2.7 million for little Joshua Hunter, will appear again in court, this time for Joseph Wahlberg.

Attorneys Lynn C. Harris and Allen K. Young of Young, Harris and Carter in Provo, have accepted another malpractice suit, said Harris.

The complaint in the 4th District Court shows they now represent Wahlberg, who recently filed suit against Dr. Lynn B. Rowe, M.D., for the death of his wife, Joan.

In August 1981, Mrs. Wahlberg contacted Rowe regarding medical weight problems. A cholecystectomy was scheduled with a stomach stapling procedure to treat her obesity, the report stated.

After the operation, she developed signs of infection and indications of medical complications.

Following a second operation on Sept. 13, 1981, at Mountain View Hospital, Mrs. Wahlberg was sent to LDS Hospital in Salt Lake City, said the complaint.

Fifteen days after her second operation, Mrs. Wahlberg underwent surgery a third time. She died on Oct. 10, 1981, according to her husband.

In his complaint, Wahlberg said Rowe was negligent in "failing to properly inform and educate" his late wife with regard to the "substantial risk and dangers involved in a gastric stapling procedure."

His complaint also states that specific surgical procedures and treatment rendered by Rowe to Mrs. Wahlberg were "not in conformity with accepted surgical and medical procedures and standards."

Harris, Wahlberg's attorney, said it would take from six months to a year before all the facts are brought together on the case.

Clark's day good, walks with help, uses bike pedals

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Artificial heart recipient Barney Clark, the oozing of blood in his nose subsiding, walked with assistance Wednesday and pumped the pedals of an exercise machine.

Clark, "with the assistance of physical therapists and nurses, walked approximately 10 feet with his walker," said a statement released by University of Utah Medical Center spokesman John Dwan.

Clark also pumped the pedals of an exercise cycle for five minutes, Dwan said.

The 62-year-old retired dentist from the Seattle area then went for a wheelchair ride through the hospital, Dwan said. He stopped for a visit with his surgeon, Dr. William DeVries, in DeVries' office and spent some time sitting in the solarium, Dwan said.

"The oozing of blood from the left nasal passage appears to be lessening," said Dwan.

Clark underwent surgery Jan. 18 to stop blood gushing from his nose, and doctors say there has been no severe bleeding since then, but he has continued to have problems with blood oozing from his left nasal passage.

Irritation Doctors say the bleeding was caused by irritation from a gastric-nasal tube which has been removed from his nose and anti-coagulants which Clark will take for the rest of his life to prevent blood from clotting around his plastic Jarvik-7 heart.

"Dr. Clark seems to be having a good day, but again we want to emphasize that he will take many good days for him to recover," Dwan said.

Clark, in his 62nd day on the heart, continued Wednesday in serious but stable condition.

Clark became the first permanent recipient of an artificial heart when the device was implanted Dec. 2.

Great Salt Lake 'coming up'

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Great Salt Lake as topped the official flood stage by a tenth of a foot, a federal official said.

The lake was 4,202.1 feet above sea level when measured Tuesday, said Ted Arnow, district chief of the U.S. Geological Survey Water Resources Division.

The last time the lake reached that level was in 1976, but that was after the spring runoff, he said. The level was recorded at the Salt Lake County east harbor west of Saltair on the south shore.

"Coming up" There are no surges or anything else," Arnow said. "This is resulting from the flow to the lake, both from all the rivers and from the precipitation we've had in the last few days."

Because reservoirs already are full, there is little chance of holding back any of the runoff when it comes this spring, he said.

In 1977, the lake rose only 0.3 of a foot between Feb. 1 and June, when it reached its peak, he said. But in 1980, it went up 2.25 feet after Feb. 1.

"Probably in this year, it'll be between those two amounts," he said.

The state's contingency plan to control the lake, released Wednesday, says at the present level, damage or maintenance costs could amount to about $15 million. Most of that would be for maintaining causeways or beeping up dikes around extraction industries and bird refuges.

At 4,203 feet, the damage of extra costs could amount to $30 million; at 4,204, the costs could be $60 million; and at 4,205 feet, $106 million.

Utah Department of Transportation road crews have been shoring up the north side of the Antelope Island causeway with fill dirt for a month in anticipation of flooding damage.

Brine shrimp The high water level could damage the brine shrimp industry by freshening water, which harms shrimp eggs, officials said.

And high winds already have blown salt water over Farmington Bay's dike, killing vegetation and contaminating the bay's fresh water.

"We're having problems with the dikes (both at the bay and a state waterfowl area) eroding," said Allen Hash, Davis County conservation officer for the Utah Division of Wildlife Resources. "If the dikes fail, there will be additional problems because the salt water will destroy vegetation and eliminate valuable nesting areas."

Dikes at other wildlife refuges along the lake also will be threatened by continued high water, officials said.

The contingency plan says the best short-term solution to the problem is to pump water out of the lake onto the west desert and let it evaporate. If that plan were put into operation immediately, the pumping could begin in 1985 and cost between $20 million and $50 million.

Possible long-term solutions are dams on the Bear River, fresh-water evaporation ponds in Box Elder County and a pumping system to store water and then bring it back to the lake, the plan said.

ONCE UPON A TIME ...

...there was a fair young maiden who decided to go to BYU to complete her degree. On her arrival, she found, much to her dismay, that some of the classes she needed were already filled. She exclaimed, "Whatever shall I do?"

Just then her fairy godmother appeared and told her about BYU Independent Study. Said the fairy godmother, "My sweet child, BYU Independent Study has more than 300 college-level courses available to students like yourself whose classes are all filled up!"

"Not only that," added the fairy godmother, "Independent Study lets you enroll at any time during the year and take from a few weeks to a year to complete your course."

"What a relief!" exclaimed the fair young maiden. "I did so want to please my prince by graduating on time."

"One more thing," said the fairy godmother, "you can study at home or wherever you want to."

"Oh good!" said the fair young maiden. "Now I can enjoy watching my prince down at the lake jumping from lily pad to lily pad. He does so love doing that."

"I almost forgot," said the fairy godmother, "call 378-2868 or go to the Harman Continuing Education Building for more information."

Gibbs aware of danger

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Joe Gibbs, coach of Washington's newly-crowned Super Bowl kings, knows there is danger lurking in the Redskins' championship.

For evidence, he need only look at recent history. In the last four years, the Super Bowl has hosted eight different teams. It has not exactly been the citadel of consistency since the decade of the 70s, when Dallas or Minnesota in the National Conference and Pittsburgh or Miami in the American Conference seemed to show up every season.

Gibbs thinks about Pittsburgh, Oakland and San Francisco, the previous three Super Bowl champions who failed to make it back to the title game the next year.

"What happens to you as a coach is that as soon as you win the last game, you start worrying about the next one," he said. "You build a monster. If you're winning, people expect and demand that you win, from the owner on down."

"This is going to be a tough act to follow." He will try anyway, and one method will be to keep the Redskins aware of their character.

"When you win, you can start thinking you're better than what you are," Gibbs said. "That can kill you. If we do that, we'll get beat and beat badly. We're a team that has to fight every inch. If we lose that character, we'll be doomed."

So the coach preaches a down-to-earth approach for his team.

"I told them before the game: 'You're the same persons you were 16 weeks ago. Just because you win a few football games, that doesn't change anything. You're just another human being.'"

Gibbs thinks the line between success and failure in his business is awfully slim.

"You're never more than two games from disaster. You get a test every Sunday and you can't get a C. It's an 'A' or you flunk. Two flunks and you're in trouble."

Gibbs said he saw room for improvement in his team and that Washington would be using the draft for that purpose. After many years with few or no choices as a result of trades, the Redskins have most of their selections in the April draft.

Intramural hoops bouncing along

By GARY SMITH
Staff Writer

It's that time of year when most sports move inside and hundreds of students break out the hightops, brush up on their dribbling and shooting, and get into shape, and BYU's No. 1 intramural sport is well underway.

On Jan. 18, intramural basketball began and, soon after, the intramurals office had filled its 500-team quota. In fact, approximately 80 additional teams will have to wait for a forfeit before being able to show their stuff.

According to Mark Williams, a graduate assistant in charge of the basketball program, this is the first year the office set a limit on the number of intramural teams. Last year the program started out with 613 teams and, by the end of the season, it was down to about 530 teams. That final number was the basis for this year's 500-team limit, which includes the men, women, and church teams.

In order to cut down the number of forfeits, entering teams were required to pay a forfeit deposit, which they will get back at the end of the season if they don't forfeit.

The purpose of the fee is to weed out those who don't really want to play. "We (the teams) don't like to go to a game and the other team doesn't show up," Williams said.

Concerning the 80 extra teams that registered, Williams said, "I have to have more than 500 teams. If a team legitimately forfeits, I've got to have a team to put in there."

"The forfeits have been cut tremendously."

In addition to forfeits, intramurals has the problem of poor sportsmanship. "People usually won't be suspended unless they are belligerent, forceful, or vulgar," Williams said.

"We're not here to have the 4A best basketball team in the nation," he said. "The program is for sportsmanship and enjoyment."

Some players take the program too seriously, Williams said. "A 1A player can get just as mad as a 4A player, but in the past it seems 3A and 4A teams get out of hand more than the 1A and 2A teams."

In addition, teams sometimes sign up in a classification below their ability to play so they can win, which is called "sandbagging."

If a team is found to be dominating its league, it is moved up in its classification before tournament play begins.

So far, Williams said, there doesn't seem to be problems with the officials.

"So far we haven't had any complaints, but we've only been going two weeks," he said. "Inevitably we're going to have problems with officials, but we go through all the steps of certifying."

Intramurals uses nine full courts, except when the courts are being used for special events.

The office provides teams with jerseys, the scoreboard, and a list of officials to choose from.

The intramurals office, however, cannot take all the credit for interest in the program, Williams said. "We can't take all the credit. There are a 1,000 guys, especially in the LDS realm, who grow up playing basketball. Everybody likes to play basketball."

Gifts sold at museum

By DAWN BERRY
Staff Writer

Feather-covered eggs, elephant hair bracelets, authentic scrimshaw and artist's conk are some of the unusual gift items sold in the Bean Museum Gift Shop.

Marlou Nelson, the curator of the gift shop, said the items are ordered through 25 different suppliers. The museum staff also gives Nelson ideas of items to carry.

Scrimshaw and artist's conk are the most unusual

Marlou Nelson, curator of the gift shop of the Monte L. Bean Museum, shows some of the unique but authentic hand-made gifts sold to visitors. Some of the unusual gifts are scrimshaws made from whale's teeth or walrus tusks.

items sold in the gift shop. Both are created by Carlene Allred of Haines, Alaska.

Authentic scrimshaw is rare and is made of walrus tusks or whale's teeth.

Most jewelry stores carry scrimshaw that are made of plastic and engraved by machine, Nelson said.

Scrimshaw is created by etching a picture into the ivory and then rubbing India ink into the lines, according to Donald Allred, the artist's father-in-law.

The Eskimos are the only ones allowed to hunt whales and walrus, and they are not allowed to sell the teeth and ivory needed to create the scrimshaw. The artist, therefore, bartered with the Eskimos and trades artist's conk for the needed material for scrimshaw, he said.

Artist's conk is a picture that has been etched into a fungus.

The fungus is commonly called "bear bread." It is rare and grows on downed cottonwood, almost under the fallen log, where it is shady and moist, Allred said.

The fungus is broken off the log and placed in a special case that protects the snow-white, gelatinous material on the underside of the fungus, he said. It is in this material that the picture will be etched.

Each scratch leaves a permanent brown line once the scene has been scratched into the surface. It is then left to dry for two weeks, after which the surface is hard.

The shop carries a menagerie of animals from around the world, including Scottish sheep made of unbrushed wool and a wood base, and antelope and horse-like animals made from a banana leaf or unwoven straw wrapped tightly around a base and tied.

Nelson said there is also a variety of wooden animals from Kenya. In addition, there are llamas made of wool thread that has been wrapped around the form of the animal. These are made by the Cuzco Indians of Peru.

The shop also carries items that are made in Utah, she said. These include cards, baskets, and a styrofoam egg on copper-covered wood decorated with the feathers of Utah game birds.

Unusual jewelry, some made of shells from around the world, is on sale. It includes bracelets made from the hair of an elephant's tail. The hair is wrapped tightly into shape and made in a way that allows the bracelet to adjust to fit the wearer.

Health Center cardiologist researches artificial blood

By CAROL JENCKS
Staff Writer

Dr. Alan Toronto, a cardiologist at the McDonald Health Center, has made major contributions to the development of artificial hearts, lungs and synthetic blood.

Coming to BYU after long experience with research in laboratory medicine, Toronto was involved in testing synthetic bloods for toxicity and performance.

The need for blood substitutes, Toronto said, is expanding because skills in medicine are increasing. For example, large quantities of blood are required for priming heart-lung and kidney dialysis machines, which are now in greater use.

Toronto also said human blood requires careful typing and depends on donors. All these factors stimulate the demand for artificial blood.

Some synthetic bloods have been developed, but they are not biodegradable, so they remain in the body system, building up in the liver and spleen, he said.

Toronto's work has been in testing new biodegradable substitutes in animals. He said that rats have been completely transfused with synthetic bloods, with favorable results.

Although complete transfusions are rarely needed, the new blood would be helpful for people with sickle-cell anemia who are in a crisis, patients who have major surgery, and carbon monoxide poisoning and drug overdose patients.

It is also useful for people who have religious convictions against blood transfusions, such as Jehovah's Witnesses.

On November 14, 1979, four pints of artificial blood were given to Haldor Mickelson, the first person to receive a transfusion of a blood substitute in the United States. However, the Food and Drug Administration has not approved the substitute for general marketing.

The FDA is requesting more testing of possible blood substitutes before giving final approval for marketing.

The National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute selected two or three of the best artificial bloods from the research of Toronto and others for additional testing.

Although the Institute will continue studying these bloods, Toronto's research has ended. He now works as a staff physician at the health center, with some teaching and administrative responsibilities.

Toronto, a graduate of Marquette University Medical School in Milwaukee, has worked at the LDS Hospital and University of Utah Research Institute.

Toronto commutes between BYU and the University of Utah, where he is an adjunct professor in bioengineering and an assistant research professor in biophysics.

Site overgrown by corn field

Team discovers Smith home

By MELINDA KOEHLER

Historical events taking place on the Joseph Smith family's 100-acre farm in the early 1800s were significant in the growth of the church. It was there that Joseph Smith saw God the Father, his Son, Jesus Christ, and it was also there that the angel Moroni appeared to Joseph Smith.

Now, a century later, the site of the cabin that stood on the farm has been discovered and excavated, said Dr. Dale Berge, a BYU professor of anthropology.

Digging began last summer in what is now a corn field. After five weeks, a well, a shallow cellar and numerous artifacts were discovered, he said.

In 1970, Dr. Larry C. Porter, director of the church history area of the Religious Studies Center at BYU, found a surveyor's report that mentioned the cabin and its location.

Became interested

Berge said he first became interested in this site a year before when he worked on the Peter Whitmer log dwelling. In the following years, other historical documents were checked to add information. Aerial photographs were also taken, and money was raised to aid in the excavation of the cabin, he said.

In 1981, Berge completed a study of the 17 aerial photographs taken in order to determine the exact location of the cabin. Once the location was found, work began.

The excavation started June 25; a five-member team uncovered the cabin in a month's time, he said. Those helping in the excavation, other than Berge, were Don Ender and Mike Smith of the LDS Church's Division of Arts and Historic Sites; Warren C. Van Pelt and William O. Perry, Jr., anthropology graduate students; and Kurt W. Berge. Dr. LaMar Berrett and Dr. Larry Porter also spent one day at the site, and various volunteers from the Rochester, N.Y., area also helped in the dig, he said.

Well found

During the dig, a well was found. Burnt brick fragments were found inside the well, which indicated a fireplace was in the home. "We know the cabin had a fireplace because Joseph Smith, Jr., in his account of his first vision in the Sacred Grove, writes that he went home and 'leaned up to the fireplace,'" he said.

A shallow cellar was also uncovered, he said. Inside the cellar, artifacts such as ceramics, straight pins, buckles, silverware, wheat, beans and a lid to a cast-iron pot were found. Berge said he believes the cellar was under the floor because the artifacts are the type that could fall through the cracks in the floor.

"There can be little doubt that the area excavated was that where the Joseph Smith, Sr., log cabin stood in the early 1800s," he said. "Apparently the Smiths built the cabin, lived in it between 1815 and 1825, and used it for a barn after they moved into the frame house."

Conclusions made from the discovery are that the cabin was a two-room log cabin with an attached sawed-slab bedroom. It had a fireplace, flat-glass windows, a fairly large well and a shallow cellar under the floor, Berge said.

The excavation project cost more than $10,000, he said. Funds were obtained from the College of Religious Instruction, College of Family, Home and Social Sciences, the Religious Studies Center, Department of Church History and Doctrine, Department of Anthropology, Museum of Peoples and Cultures and various personal donations, he said.

Games center workers see more than bowling

By DAWN DEBERRY
 Staff Writer

Workers at the Wilkinson Center Games Center are sometimes persuaded to deliver birthday wishes or engagement rings, but they say it's all part of the job.

Working at the Games Center can be rewarding and memorable, said Shafter Bown, manager.

One incident concerned a couple who met through the bowling league. When he decided she was the one, he arranged for the ring and a note to be placed in the thumb-hole of her ball on its first return, Bown said. This prevented her from being able to put her thumb in the hole, and she discovered the ring. Her answer, of course, was yes.

Some of the things that have happened are not quite so pleasant, although looking back they are humorous, he said.

Once a young man showing off tried to see how hard he could throw the ball down the lane, Bown said. However, the ball got stuck on his thumb and it didn't release at the right time. Instead it came loose when his arm was above his head.

The ball flew into the air and through the ceiling, scattering pieces of tile. Once up, the ball did not come down. A man was eventually sent to retrieve the ball.

The desk by the miniature golf course was once a dangerous place, said Dale Chanterill, acting supervisor of the Games Center. The 10th hole faces the rest of the center, and people would often underestimate their swing.

It was not unusual for a busy attendant to have a golf ball zip past his head. This led to a net being put up to catch the balls, he added.

A few summers ago, an employee who usually worked in the back of the bowling lanes as a mechanic was working the front desk, Bown said.

Two girls with their jeans rolled up to just above their knees came in and asked for a lane. "Yes," the attendant said, "on one condition." The attendant thought it improper for them to have their pants rolled up. He said "If you take your pants down, I'll give you a lane."

The girls turned red from embarrassment, but the attendant didn't realize he had said anything wrong. He turned to do something, realized his mistake and tried to explain.

Another story involved a well-known person who was giving a tour of the campus. He brought the group to the Games Center and decided to give a demonstration of how to bowl. He asked for lane number five to be turned on, chose his ball, walked up to the lane and stepped up to release the ball. As he released it, he fell forward and bounced halfway down the alley on his chest.

Tom Murdock, public relations director for the Ballroom Dance Company, displays some of the sequins that will adorn the dance team's new costumes when they compete in international competition in Blackpool, England this May. The costumes for Latin and modern competition will cost approximately $16,000.

Dancers will shine

New outfits in style

By WENDY CARVER
Staff Writer

The Ballroom Dance Company will be going to the British Formation Championships in style this year, said Linda Wakefield, costume designer for the company.

BYU has done well in international competition, but their costumes haven't been up to date, Wakefield said.

Ballroom fashions change from year to year just as street fashions do. But, by the time the styles get to the Utah area, they are usually out of date in the professional dance world, she said.

Wakefield said designers and costume makers have been making costume preparations since May for the competition in Blackpool, England this May.

However, Blackpool is not the dance company's only destination. The team will be leaving for a 10-day Southwest tour today. The tour will include a stop in Los Angeles for costume fittings.

Approximately $16,000 will be spent on the costumes for the championships in Blackpool, she said. Although this is the largest amount of money the company has spent on costumes at one time, Wakefield feels it is a necessity. "We really feel we will be up against a lot of competition."

The Blackpool competition will include four U.S. teams and several other European teams who will be well-versed in fashion, she said.

"It's important that we be the best and the most current. Everything must be up to par," she said. Most importantly, Wakefield said, "The girls need to feel like the best-dressed girl out on the floor."

The dancers feel better and dance better when they wear fashionable costumes and look as good as other dance teams, she said.

The new costumes are being made for the Latin and modern divisions by costume makers in California and England.

The ladies' modern division ballgowns were designed by Wakefield and her husband, Lee, director of the Ballroom Dance Company. "We wanted them to look elegant," said Wakefield. "The top priority in designing them is the effect."

To design the costumes, Wakefield had to look at the group as a whole and find an effect that was becoming to the entire formation.

The ballgowns are yellow with black appliques and are being made by Fancy Fashions, Inc. in Los Angeles.

The appliques on each ballgown will be highlighted with almost 2,000 rhinestones and 6,000 sequins, which the dancers will sew on by hand.

'The steer is a star,' studio says

ESTES PARK, Colo. (AP) — A Hollywood studio thinks Charlie, the grand champion steer at the National Western Stock Show, has "character" and deserves a screen test, but the man who paid $30,050 for Charlie has turned down the deal. Charlie will be butchered this week at a Monfort of Colorado processing plant, said Nick Kane, who runs Nicky's Restaurant in Estes Park and bought Charlie at the stock show in Denver last month.

Employees of 20th Century-Fox Studios wanted to fly to Estes Park to evaluate Charlie's potential for the movies, but Kane said the studio's requirements were too demanding. He said the studio required a special diet, hiring a trainer and putting Charlie through his paces for a year.

'Showboat' to open as local production

Opera West, a Provo-based opera company, will present the musical "Showboat" today at 8 p.m. in the Provo Tabernacle.

A number of BYU students will perform in the musical, with lyrics by Oscar Hammerstein and music by Jerome Kern.

"Showboat" was the first American theater piece performed in the United States, said Gene Larsson, artistic and musical director for the production.

"It's a grand old show with such favorites as 'Old Man River,' 'Can't Help Lovin' That Man,' 'Why Do I Love Him,' and others," said Gay Parvis, publicity chairman for Opera West.

Playing the lead as Gaylord Ravenal will be BYU student Robert Wilson, a freshman from Provo majoring in music theater.

"Showboat" will play Friday, Tuesday and Wednesday at 8 p.m. Tickets can be purchased at Wakefield's in Provo, ZCMI in Orem, Sabine's in American Fork and at the door.

TV audience biggest ever for NBC's Super Bowl XVII

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Super Bowl XVII racked up its biggest television audience ever, boosting NBC to a rare dominance in the Nielsen ratings for the week ended Jan. 30.

NBC said the professional football game was seen Sunday in 40,480,000 homes. The game — in which the Washington Redskins defeated the Miami Dolphins 27-17 at Pasadena — had a rating of 48.6 percent and a share of 69 percent, according to NBC, ABC and the A.C. Nielsen Co.'s ratings.

Nielsen says that means the game was seen in 48.6 percent all homes with television, and was watched in 69 percent of all homes tuned to any program during the time it was played.

Fantasy fulfilled through show

Husband, family to be united

By WENDY CARVER
Staff Writer

Some people think fantasies only come true in storybooks with happily-ever-after endings. But one BYU student, Lisa Murphy, knows that isn't true. Murphy's fantasy will be granted today on national television. Murphy, a senior from Provo majoring in French, was chosen to appear on the television program

"Fantasy." The program grants wishes to people who submit letters stating their fantasy, and why they want it. Murphy is not the only local resident who has had a fantasy fulfilled. In January, two Franklin Elementary students, Tricia and Tiffany Thein of Orem, had their request for mirrors at their school granted by the television show.

Murphy's fantasy is to return with her husband, who is also a BYU student, to his homeland of Yorkshire, England.

Murphy said her fantasy is not that unusual, but the reasoning behind her fantasy is what makes it unique.

Murphy's husband, Shaun, a senior from Provo majoring in design technology, came to the United States five years ago to get an education.

"He came here without a penny in his pocket and all of his possessions packed in one suitcase," she said. Since then, he has worked hard to put himself through school, she said. He is the first member of his family to pursue a college education and will be the first to graduate from a university.

"I wanted this to be my graduation gift to him," Murphy said. "I want to see him reunited with his family."

Murphy decided to submit her fantasy after watching the television program for several months.

"I was so touched by the first show I had watched, so I began watching regularly," she said. "It's refreshing to see good things happen to people."

Murphy noticed the show frequently reunited families. "I thought of my husband's situation and felt his story was unusual enough—it was worth a try," she said.

Writing the letter to "Fantasy" paid off for Murphy.

She never gave up hope while she waited to hear if her fantasy had been accepted. "I wouldn't have written the letter if I didn't think I had a chance of getting on the program," Murphy said.

"I feel the story behind the fantasy was a good one and I think they saw the value in it," Murphy said.

Even though the fantasy is for Murphy's husband, she admits it means a lot to her too. She has never had an opportunity to meet any of his family and she is looking forward to meeting them all.

The exciting thing about Murphy's fantasy is it will be a total surprise to him, she said.

Her husband knows she has submitted a fantasy, but he thinks she is asking for a ploy. Shaun won't know it has to do with him until the program begins taping and they read her letter, Murphy said.

"It's been hard keeping the secret from him," Murphy said. "I would feel very badly if he found out before the taping, and I've had some close calls." She said her whole fantasy depends on the element of surprise.

It would still be great, Murphy said, but because it's a gift to him, it wouldn't be exciting if he found out before.

At this point, Murphy's biggest disappointment is the national television program will not be aired locally.

"Fantasy" was canceled in the Utah area earlier in January. According to Lamar Smith, program director for KUTV in Salt Lake, the program was canceled because of its failing ratings.

Murphy had hoped her segment of the series would be aired locally, but, Smith said, it isn't possible to televise one segment of a series after the series has been canceled.

Her segment will be taped in Hollywood today and will be televised Feb.

Playing is hard work for the college crowd

By ELLEN FAGG
Entertainment Editor

It was easy when I was a kid. When I had a few free hours after school and before dinner, I could always find some neighborhood kids to play four-square with or run next door to play jacks.

Last weekend, some friends gathered at my humble cubicle of an apartment to have a party. After the food was gone, we turned on the TV. It wasn't time for M-A-S-H. We had all seen the gas pedal of The General floored a zillion times on "Dukes of Hazzard," and none of us really were feeling up to watching an educational program.

When you are in college, what do you do for fun?

After logging endless bleary-eyed hours in the library, it's not easy to play. For the serious student continuously buried under term papers and tests, it is hard to shift gears and simply relax.

I mean, my roommates would think I'm a little bit different if I started playing dress-up.

The thrill of playing Barbies faded somewhere on the road to college—Malibu Ken looks really plastic to me now—and I just don't make time to play mean games of four-square anymore.

And have you ever noticed the hard-core ex-high school jocks who are always playing basketball down in the Richards Building aren't really playing for fun? They are too busy concentrating on winning to enjoy the game.

I think somewhere in the depths of a back closet in my apartment I could probably find a stray set of Uno cards. But while playing Uno used to be fun, now drawing four more cards just doesn't make my list of all-time favorite activities.

Poker is against standards, and chess takes too much intellect to be considered relaxation in my book.

Have you ever tried to play social coordinator and instigate party games with the typical group of college students? It's about as easy as talking your English professor into letting you take a test late, and as much fun as getting your wisdom teeth pulled over Christmas vacation.

Now Pigmania is a game that's okay if you are into hog-yelling contests, but even playing with little plastic porkers gets a bit old after a while.

No one seems to be thrilled over the prospect of playing Spin-the-Bottle or Postman anymore. And pre-med students know too much to have fun playing Doctor.

Last year we were going to have a Rook marathon, but it ended abruptly when we discovered several of the guys were thinking of joining the pre-circuit and it wasn't any fun for them to play with us amateurs.

Have you noticed the latest GE requirement is only in effect at ward parties? Lately it seems no BYU ward can hold an opening social without playing Mingle.

So we sat there, my friends and I, staring blankly at the walls for entertainment.

We finally decided playing was too much work, and we hiked back up to the library to study.

TV's Johnny wins battle over name

CINCINNATI (AP) — Entertainer Johnny Carson won a court battle Tuesday to prevent the use of the phrase "Here's Johnny" as a brand name for portable toilets.

The 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that "Here's Johnny" is too closely identified with Carson as host of NBC's "The Tonight Show" to allow it to be used without Carson's permission.

Carson had objected to use of the phrase by a Troy, Mich., company, Here's Johnny Portable Toilets Inc., which began marketing the toilets in 1976.

Cammer reaction for insanity plea

The shock caused by the televised shooting of President Reagan and the public outcry over the John W. Hinckley verdict of not guilty by reason of insanity has now diffused into a flurry of legislative activity. Lawmakers in Washington, D.C., California, Utah and several other states are now proposing alternatives to the insanity plea. California is now considering Senate Bill 141, "Guilty but Insane."

A similar bill is before Utah lawmakers now. House Bill 225 proposes to retain the insanity plea and to add a second component "Guilty and Mentally Ill."

Retention of the Insanity Plea is sound. There will always be people in our society who are mentally incapable of comprehending the element of intention in their commission of a crime. These people should not be held responsible.

Media attention on this issue has distorted the public view of how often the insanity plea is raised as a defense, according to Dr. Robert J. Howell, director of BYU's Clinical Psychology Program and one of the authors of House Bill 225. This defense is raised far less often than the public imagines, according to Howell. Only five cases involving the insanity plea were raised in Utah between mid-1978 and mid-1980, Howell wrote.

The guilty-and-mentally-ill clause calls for a mandatory five-year term of treatment in the Utah State Hospital or similar facility, or treatment would run for the period of sentencing if less than five years.

House Bill 225 is a good amendment to present law involving these issues. However, the questions of funding for treatment programs, lack of space in local community mental health facilities, and treatment after legal constraints have expired still remain.

Safety main point

The explosion that rocked the Ireco Chemical Co. near Lehi last week also rocked the state. Four men were killed by the blast, reminiscent of the explosion that claimed five lives at a Grantsville explosives plant more than a year ago.

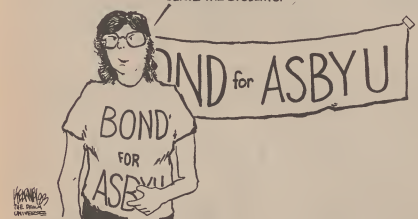

The physical power of an explosion makes such accidents highly visible, but other industrial accidents also kill workers in Utah. In 1982, 10 miners were killed in Utah mines, placing Utah fourth on the dubious list of states having the most mining deaths.

Industrial safety is something that easily escapes notice, especially since many of Utah's workers are employed in white-collar jobs and have little contact with heavy industry.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration has only 14 investigators to verify safety-rule compliance by all Utah industries. With so few investigators, it is a difficult job to make all employers look out for the safety of their employees.

Industries must be reminded of the cost of an individual, not just in the dollars and cents of labor costs and productivity, but in the human loss to family and community when a worker is killed or severely injured. The last thing we need is another Ireco.

I AM RESIGNING AS OMBUDSMAN SO I CAN BETTER SERVE THE STUDENTS.

Letters to the Editor

Non-engineers speak out

Don't shine your medals

Editor: I disagree with Mr. Baker's evaluation of whose education and career is more important than whose else. It is pointless to argue how much harder one program is than the next guy's and even more pointless to point fingers or call names. It only lessens one's character to do so.

It is like asking what is more important, faith or works, justice or mercy, the man or the woman. The value of one's career is purely subjective. I have seen the handwork of some engineers that merited an apology, much less a salary. Likewise, I have known educators of the same caliber.

The point is that a person has no right to shine his academic or professional medals over those of someone else. A million-dollar job is still a million-dollar job, regardless of which vocation is its sponsor. In the same light, so is the job worthy of an apology.

Majors not comparable

Editor: In response to Rod Baker's Tuesday's paper, I have a few points to make. There is no such thing as an easy major. Each one requires different aptitudes. Being good at one major does not guarantee that the same individual will be good at another one. Majors are not comparable. Physics and engineering are not the only classes that require "an investment in blood, sweat, and tears."

I have yet to be convinced that building a bridge or designing a space shuttle is more important than teaching a young child to read or teaching a 17-year old how our political system works before he goes to vote for the first time. Engineers are not the elite gods of the university, regardless of what they think.

P.S. Who taught you how to be engineers?

Sharon Smith, (a non-engineering major) Boise, Idaho

Tot safety not questioned, law seen as infringement

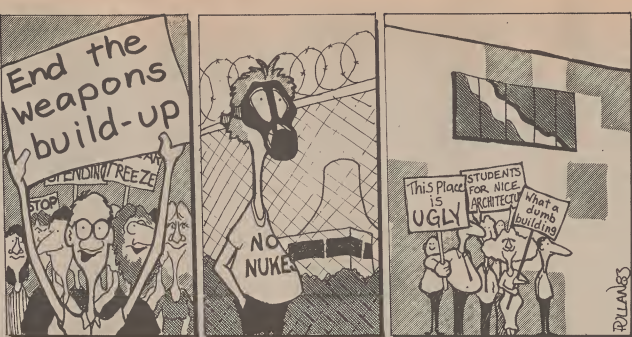

Editor: I am writing in response to your Universe Opinion article about the proposed car seat law. I am completely in agreement that car seats and restraints are necessary, and that parents should always protect their children with such life-saving devices. I don't even think that is in question. What bothers me, however, is the practicality of the proposed law. It isn't unusual, of course, for mothers to have to hold their young children in their laps for consolation, such as during a trip to the doctor. To expect a mother to strap such a child in a seat is unrealistic. It also isn't unusual for a mother to nurse her baby during a drive. This is often necessary, especially during long trips.

I agree that it is the parents' responsibility to make sure their tots are buckled up. But it is also their responsibility to see to it that gates are at the tops of stairs; that all pot handles are turned to the middle of the stove; that cribs and toys are safe; that their children are dressed warmly on a cold day; and that the bath water is lukewarm instead of hot. Mothers should also never smoke while carrying babies. But why have the car seats been singled out?

We definitely need to protect our children. They can't do it for themselves. But I don't think that Senate Bill 17 is any more than an encroachment of government in the affairs of family life. Education, not legislation, is the answer.

Provo under coupon siege

With the nation bogged down in a recession, many local businesses are using innovative means to get consumers into their stores. Some hire nauseating television personalities such as T. Buff to introduce products, whereas others have weekly turn-out, water-damaged, going-out-of-business, never-to-return sales.

Neven Lundquist of the Provo Chamber of Commerce observes that as a result of the recession, people are spending less and businesses are suffering. For this reason, many local stores have been flooding the market with coupons.

Such coupons can be found practically everywhere you look. They drop out of the daily newspaper. The mailman brings them to your door; even your windshield wiper waves them in front of your face on occasion. Coupons are taking Provo by storm.

However, one car dealer in Anaheim, Calif., might not agree in the success of coupons. A consumer in his area collected 91 coupons giving herself a $9,100 discount on a 1983 Oldsmobile. Evidently, they failed to include on each coupon the "one per person" clause; consequently, it appears that the shopper will win the car in a false advertisement suit.

Defending the use of coupons, the manager of a local food chain outlet argues that most coupons benefit everyone involved. January and February are the slowest months for Provo businesses and coupons seem to increase retail volume. One restaurant manager mentioned that business increases three fold when two-for-one or three-for-one dollar coupons are used.

Battling the constant increase of tuition, books and living expenses, many students turn to coupons whenever they can get a good deal. A local theater manager claims that many students would be priced out of the market if they were forced to pay the full admission price charged in larger cities. Moreover, another fast-food manager comments that some students will not come in at all unless there is a deal of some sort.

When a business issues coupons, it relies on increased volume to compensate for lower prices. At Burger King, one employee reports the store makes little profit on its two-for-one coupons. "We depend on additional purchases to pick up the slack in profits," she adds.

Despite the apparent benefits associated with coupons, students are divided over their use. One well-dressed coed stresses that it is really "tacky" to take a girl to a three-for-one restaurant for a date. "It really tells me a lot about the guy," she commented. Conversely, though, another coed mentions that coupons are the "only way to go" when seeing a movie these days. She said she feels that it just does not make sense to pay twice as much when you don't have to.

Whatever your feelings are concerning coupons, they are here to stay for at least a while. The combination of lower-priced products and increased sales volume guarantee their practicality in our a recession-bound economy.

BYU known for good, clean fun

BYU, for the out-of-state non-Mormon, is primarily known by its variety sports and its strict Code of Honor. In fact, many who are relatively unacquainted with the school and its atmosphere wonder how a private university, founded and managed by a religious organization, can be anything short of a modern-day monastery.

Yet, little by little, the "outside world" is beginning to realize that most BYU social fun does not revolve around unisex dorms, the neighborhood liquor store, a friendly junkie or the back seat of a car. "The New York Times' Selective Guide to Colleges" says BYU students "seem to appreciate the discipline required by their surroundings," but noted that "the combination of the social code and the tightness of the community can make the school seem a little unreal and isolated from the rest of the world."

The guide also quoted a student as saying, "At BYU you can have the time of your life without being stoned or drunk." And a recent Playboy poll of 20 colleges placed BYU dead last for its "least lively" involvement in sexual promiscuity and complained that the hottest local spot was on any plane leaving town. Such a rating is a compliment in disguise for BYU and its Code of Honor.

Bob Greene, a nationally syndicated columnist, applauded BYU's Code of Honor in an editorial titled "No 'Animal House' Behavior at BYU," and said it "sounds like a dream."

The Rolling Stone Magazine has had a writer on the BYU campus during the past few days, probing students as to what makes BYU unique from other colleges.

What, then, is the difference? How can BYU students temporarily escape the daily pressures of textbooks, homework and midterms?

Much of the difference must center around creativity. How much creativity does it require to plan an evening around a six-pack of Bud or a sexual-by-activity classmate?

Creativity is demonstrated by a stuffed toy rabbit being flung among the throngs of movie-goers attending a midnight showing of "Monty Python and the Holy Grail." It is equally expressed by invitations to participate in dances, dates and matrimony.

Creativity is a freshman riding the conveyor belt reserved for dishes in a dorm cafeteria, a midnight ride down Sundance's snowy slopes on a lunch tray or a bizarre talent show at Concer's Impromptu.

Social life at BYU is not exclusive to just the saints or the sinners; it is a combination of both. Some need the "wine and women (or men)" to lead a "successful" social life, while others are content to create a certain atmosphere and pleasure without such social stimulants.

BYU, as Greene noted, does not follow the R-rated standards of collegiate living as set by "Animal House." But by no means is it a squeaky-clean convent for the Flying Nun.

With their practical jokes and creative dating, students have fostered a unique social atmosphere here at BYU—one that has captured part of the media's attention.

But at the same time, BYU will be the target of the media's pointing finger if the majority of the students fail to live up to such a reputation.

Snacks junk body

Mornings find many students racing through the Cougarat, grabbing a doughnut for breakfast and heading off to class. The choice of glazed, filled or chocolate-covered is more than enough to boggle the mind and make student forget the advice mother used to give on money to eat, well, eating a good breakfast.

By afternoon these same student can be found hovering near one of the 350 vending machines placed in almost every building on campus for snack between meals.

Students almost inevitably become junk-food junkies in the process of gaining knowledge at this university. As students leave the classroom candy bars from a nearby vending machine stare them in the face. As they walk past the Wilkinson Center the aroma of bakery delights assails their nostrils. Even in the Smith Family Living Center the fragrance of cookies baking in Food Science from the end of the building to the other.

Candy bars Thousands of candy bars, including 2,000 Snickers bars, are eaten each week by students who have neither the time nor the money to eat well-balanced meals or just don't care to do so.

The college diet is becoming less and less healthy, say nutritionists. Many students would eat nutritionally balanced meals if they were prepared for them.

But for students who cook for themselves, convenience foods and vending machines are becoming a way of life. Most students are too busy with school, homework or other activities to stop for foods from the aroma of bakery delights and prepare them for a sit-down meal.

The four years a college student spends eating on the run can prove detrimental to health. National studies show it requires a two years for a woman to build up her body's sources to handle the stress of pregnancy.

Now assuming that a woman comes to BYU and acquires bad eating habits (many do), gets married (many do) and becomes pregnant during college years (many do), she is doing neither herself nor the unborn child favor by eating many of her meals from vending machines before or during the pregnancy.

Affects men

Women are not alone in their eating habits. Bad eating habits developed during the college years also affect men over time. P. health, lack of energy and susceptibility to disease are just some of the problems students face in not eating nutritionally.

Some students wonder why it is hard to drag vending machines out of the morning. In examining their diet it is usually found to be supplemented largely by cookies, pies and candy bars.

Sugar itself is not unhealthy, when high sugar foods take the place of nutritional foods it can affect a diet's health.

At this time of the semester studying rages on later and later the evening and the pressure of school increase, students should aluate their eating habits to see if they might be working against themselves instead of helping their bodies to remain healthy.

Forum facts and feelings

Editor:

I'm sure there are some who were pleased by the crowd at Justice O'Connor's forum address. Perhaps the student consensus was finally pricked; perhaps our thirst for knowledge is awakened at last; perhaps Yuri Andropov will defect and become an Anway distributor.

If President Holland truly wants to increase forum participation he must understand us. We want the big win in sports; bring us UCLA and we cheer. We want the big prize in finance; entice us with dubious tales of easy money and we buy. We want the big name behind the podium; give us a celebrity and we come running. Anyone can pay some obscure academic to come and talk to them, but we know that to get someone important you have to be important. We do not seek sport, or satisfaction, or learning as much as we seek a confirmation that we are good. We don't want our minds taxed by thought; we want our egos tanned by recognition. Give us both names and ideas that we can easily drop and attendance will never falter.

Skills poor

Editor: With reference to the article "Johnny Can't Teach" by Cheryl Karr: Amen! It's about time someone realized that a Ph.D. does not necessarily qualify one to be a teacher. Much of the "suffering" must be dealt with by students is unnecessary and is caused by poor teaching and communication skills on the part of many professors.

Seat belt hero saves lives

Each year 11,000 lives are spared in traffic fatalities across the United States. The hero in these cases is fear that a mandatory law for seat-belt use would infringe upon the freedoms of the individual concern themselves over losing voters.

The Utah legislature is currently discussing a bill that would require parents to put children under four in a restraining seat while driving. Thus, at least four-year-olds would be protected on the highway.

It is a shame, however, that children over four, teenagers and adults will not be afforded this protection. Not wearing seat belts or shoulder harnesses is a gamble for everyone, not just small children.

Unlike the Utah government officials, Sweden has taken a much stronger position regarding seat belts, making them mandatory for everyone. More than 90 percent of Swedes are now using seat belts.

Another study conducted by Volvo and the Swedish government showed that no one in that country has ever been killed—even traveling at 50 or 60 miles per hour—while wearing a shoulder harness. And no one wearing a lap belt has been killed traveling at speeds under 35 miles per hour.

Despite these statistics proving the safety benefits from mandatory seat-belt laws, our politicians are a caution. They fear that a mandatory law for seat-belt use would infringe upon the freedoms of the individual concern themselves over losing voters.

National Highway Safety Administration reveals that 90 percent of the nation favor the wearing of seat belts made mandatory, and 60 percent said it should be compulsory for drivers under 18.

Even if these same people who favor the mandatory seat-belt laws pull out every morning without buckling the survey does provide proof that government of are misjudging the public in assuming that public do want stricter safety laws.

Throughout the United States, 22 states have adopted some form of mandatory seat belt laws. No longer a common excuse as a wrinkled dress, too little time the discomfort of wearing a seat belt accepted. It law.

Good citizens abide by the laws of the land, and a mandatory seat-belt law would be no different. Laws are for citizens' protection, which is exactly what seat belts are there for.
